If you noticed an increase in flatulence after ditching animal products from your diet you’re not the only one. Many people experience an uptick in bloating when they switch to a whole-food, plant-based diet because their plate consists of more high-fiber foods—which is great for your health, but not so great at reducing gas. A 2017 study published in The American Journal of Gastroenterology assigned 412 participants to either a high-fiber diet or low-fiber diet over the course of several months. Researchers found that people eating high-fiber diets were 41% more likely to experience bloating than those on the low-fiber diets.

The biochemistry behind your increased need to pass gas is pretty simple: As you digest, bacteria in your gut ferments food that isn’t fully digestible (i.e., fiber) and produces gas as a byproduct. The more fiber you eat, the more flatulence you might experience. The good news? Over time your digestive system will adjust to the diversity of your new diet and become more adept at processing high-fiber foods, reducing the frequency of post-meal gassiness.

In the meantime, you can manage this uncomfortable—and sometimes loud—side effect of eating healthier with a few simple yoga poses. All of these postures position your body into shapes that help gas travel through the digestive system and decrease that tight, pressurized feeling in your belly. The next time you experience bloating after a meal try one of these yoga poses to relieve gas before you reach for the bottle of Tums.

Ardha Apanasana (Knee to Chest)

Quite literally translated as “wind-relieving pose,” this posture is great for helping trapped gas move through your intestines.

1. Lie flat on your back with legs extended out on the floor.
2. Pull one knee into your chest, holding your leg around the shin or kneecap. The back of your head should stay planted on the floor.
3. Keep the other leg extended out long. Hold this position for up to 5 minutes before switching sides.
4. Alternatively, you can pull both knees into your chest so you are curled into a ball.

Ananda Balasana (Happy Baby)

While it might look a little silly at first glance, this yoga posture is excellent at releasing gas and relieving a bloated stomach.
1. Lie flat on your back with knees bent and feet on the floor.
2. Pull both knees up toward your chest and press feet toward the ceiling. Your knees will be bent.
3. Grab onto your shins, ankles, or feet (depending on your flexibility). Gently pull knees closer toward the ground as your feet stay flexed up toward the ceiling and legs move gently apart.
4. Keep head and neck pressed into the ground. If it feels good, you can rock from side to side. Hold this pose for 1 to 5 minutes.

Supta Matsyendrasana (Spinal Twist)

In this pose, think of your body like a washcloth that's being wrung out to dry. Deep twists support the digestive system by compressing the organs to help move gas through the body.

1. Lay flat on your back with legs extended out long on the floor.
2. Pull your right knee into your chest by wrapping your hands around your shin or kneecap. Keep the left leg extended long.
3. Draw your right knee across your body to the left. Your knee may touch the floor or it may hover; it just depends on what feels good in your body.
4. Extend your right arm out to the side and turn your head to look over your right hand. Your left hand can stay on the bent knee or you can extend that arm out to the left side.
5. Hold this pose for 1 to 5 minutes. Roll gently onto your back and repeat on the other side.

Anjaneyasana (Low Lunge)

A great hip-opening stretch that's ideal for anyone who works at a computer all day, low lunges also help you pass gas by stretching out the pelvic muscles.
1. Start in a kneeling position on your knees. Step your right foot forward while keeping the left knee on the ground.
2. Place your hands on top of your right thigh or place them on the ground on either side of your front foot.
3. To increase the intensity of the stretch in your hips, gently scooch the back left knee further behind you, widening the stance of your lunge.
4. Hold this shape for 1 to 3 minutes. Bring the right knee back underneath your hips and step forward with the left leg to repeat on the other side.

Uttanasana (Forward Fold)

Forward folds use the power of gravity to create length in your spine and settle your stomach.

1. Stand with your feet hip-distance apart.
2. Hinge forward from your waist so that your torso is draped over your thighs. Allow your head and neck to dangle.
3. Your legs can be straight, or you can bend your knees if you have a tight low back. Your hands can rest on the floor beside your feet, rest on top of your shins, or wrap behind your calves.
4. Hold this shape for 1 to 3 minutes before slowly rolling back up to standing.

Balasana (Child’s Pose)

A calming posture for both your gut and your mind, this classic yoga pose relieves tension in the pelvic area.
1. Start in a tabletop position on your hands and knees. Bring your big toes together to touch and send your knees out a little wider.
2. Sink your hips back toward your heels, and crawl your arms out long. Your belly will rest between your thighs. Your forehead can rest on the ground or on a pillow.
3. Hold this position for 2 to 5 minutes at a time. If you feel discomfort in your low back, try raising your hips so they are stacked over your knees while you keep your arms, head, and chest pressed down toward the floor.

To learn more about a whole-food, plant-based diet, visit our Plant-Based Primer. For meal-planning support, check out Forks Meal Planner, FOK’s easy weekly meal-planning tool to keep you on a healthy plant-based path.